

Checklist for Supervisors: Onboarding New Staff Members

The successful onboarding of new staff entails a well-organised and systematic welcome, induction and integration.

How employees perceives their new working environment during their first few days and weeks in the job is crucial for their long-term commitment and job satisfaction. A successful induction period and integration creates the basis for a positive impression of the workplace, working environment and university.

The induction of new employees is essentially a management task. Accordingly, as a supervisor, it falls to you to manage and plan the overall induction process. This checklist aims to support you in preparing and planning for onboarding your new staff members.

We recommend that you appoint a mentor from the new employee's actual future working environment, who can support you with their orientation, induction and social integration. With the help of this checklist, the relevant induction tasks can be divided between management and mentors.

Before the first day: Successful integration starts before the first day on the job: New employees should know what to expect and contact persons should be on hand to answer any questions they may have. In the run-up to the first working day, all organisational formalities relating to the work contract need to be clarified (see checklist).

First working day and induction period: An employee's first impression of their new workplace can be crucial for their motivation and integration. On the first day, the focus is on getting to know the environment and briefing the new staff member on their tasks and responsibilities. The first week should cover the following: a schedule for the first months, an introduction to the (clearly defined!) tasks, presentation of the main contact persons and clarification of processes and basic conditions. On-going advice and support during the first few months, as well as regular feedback meetings with management are also essential for ensuring the successful induction and integration of new employees. Mutual expectations and the relevant management approach should also be discussed during this period. An indication of the new employee's longer-term career prospects should be given in good time before the end of the trial period.
